Harold B. Fuller has purchased the hotel property in Newburgh and took possession on Wednesday last. The hotel is being thoroughly overhauled and renovated.

The price of timothy hay sold at the highest figure since the year 1861 Wednesday morning at a Syracuse, N. Y., market. One farmer claimed to have made a sale for $32.

Cheese sales: Vankleck Hill, 13½c.; Iroquois, 13½c.; Napanee, 13½c.; Picton, 13½c. to 13½c.; Kemptville, 13½c.; Cornwall, 13½c.; Belleville, 13½c. to 13 9-16c.; London, 13½c.; Cowansville, Que., 13½c. Watertown, N. Y., 14½c. to 14½c.; Canton, N. Y., 14½c.

The temperance people have decided to submit a by-law next January to reduce the hotel licenses in St. Thomas from sixteen to ten, and shop licenses from three to two. Petitions will be circulated at once asking the city council to submit the by-law.

Three thousand and fifty dollars in fines were imposed in South Porcupine and Cochrane, this week, as a result of visits paid to these points by Provincial License Inspector, George F. Morrison, of Toronto. Ten convictions for illegal liquor selling were recorded at South Porcupine and at Cochrane when each defendant was assessed $100.

Teacher students attending the normal and model schools at North Bay are allowed $4 and $3 respectively on account of board and their fare to and from home. The amount advanced by the government to be repaid out of the earnings of the teachers. Anything to get teachers to go to North Bay. If the present offer fails the students will be handsomely bonused and given a grant of land in New Ontario.

"The result of the Quebec elections shows that if Premier Borden was to go to the country now he would meet sure defeat," said Hon. George P. Graham, M. P., former minister of railways, in an interview at Toronto. Mr. Graham went on to say that the Quebec election was a great triumph for the liberals, and went to show that the people were losing confidence in the Borden government. It showed strongly that the nationalists were no longer in favor of Borden and fore-showed his defeat at the next general election.

The privy council of London, England has decided that the supreme court of Canada has power to hear the stated cases submitted to it by the federal government. This means that the argument in the famous ne temere marriage case will proceed and the opinion of the privy council itself will be secured after the supreme court has decided. The judges of the supreme court who decided on May 7th that they would not here the Ne Temere case until the question of their jurisdiction was decided, will now probably order the argument to proceed.

A great many people are wondering when all the applications for the Fenian Raids grants will be all in. About 18,000 have applied already, and it has been stated that there were only 10,000 men serving in the raids. When seen by a Whig representative on Saturday, Lieut-Col. G. H. Hunter gave as authentic the following figures: In the raids of 1866 those under arms and coming within the rules of the grant were 55,000; in the raids of 1870 there were 52,000 men under arms; in all there were 107,000 men. Of these it is estimated that not more than 7,000 were in both raids so altogether about 100,000 men served. Col. Hunter says that in the 1870 raid he was a captain and in his company there were fifty-seven men. Of these six had served in 1866. He also said that of all that had applied to him he had only found one imposter.—Kingston Whig.

The steambarge Iona, caught fire some time during Saturday night, while on her way from Sodus Point to Montreal, laden with coal, was almost totally destroyed and sunk. Capt. Paul Hammond and the twelve members of the crew escaped. The mishap occurred at Stoney Island, about twelve miles out of Sacket's Harbor. The Iona was loaded with soft coal and made a good run out of Sodus Point on Saturday. The cause of the fire could not be ascertained. When the fire got beyond control the members of the crew took to the lifeboats, and at daybreak on Sunday they landed at Henderson's Harbor, N. Y., and from there they went to their respective homes. The steambarge was of 500 tons displacement and was owned by the F. F. Hall company, of Montreal, and was insured. There was no insurance on the cargo of coal. The loss is given as $20,000. Some years ago there was a bad fire on the Iona, near Oswego, and on that occasion she was rebuilt at Trenton.

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

Sir Chandos filled his glass, tossed it off, and rose, a trifle shaky, with the others.

When they entered the drawing-room, Judith was at the piano playing in the soft, indolent fashion in which women play while they are waiting for the men; and she stopped and looked mechanically at Julian, for, as usual, everybody wanted to hear him sing.

"Is it too soon after dinner, Julian?" said Vane, with his hand on Julian's shoulder.

"No," he said, "if Miss Orme will play the accompaniment."

She looked at him, beyond him. "You usually play your own," she said.

"This is a new one," he said; "and I can't play at sight."

She sat down to the piano, with the faintest suggestion of resignation, and played the prelude, and he sang.

It was Piusini's "Tis I," and he sang it—well, his rendering of the famous song would have satisfied even the composer. The conversation faltered and died out, and every one listened in a profound, an emotional silence.

"Oh, it is beautiful, beautiful!" murmured the young Miss Limmington. "What a lovely, lovely voice Mr. Shore has; and how exquisitely he sings!"

Vane, who happened to be near her, noted perfect agreement.

"Yes, my cousin has a wonderful voice, hasn't he?" he said, warmly. "Ask him to sing 'Kathleen Mavourneen.' I shouldn't be surprised if he makes you cry."

Julian sang "Kathleen Mavourneen," and succeeded in bringing tears to the eyes of more than Miss Limmington.

"First rate; splendid!" said Sir Charles, with a half-defiant glance at his wife. "Sing us something else, Shore?"

But Julian courteously declined. With the Spanish shrug of the shoulders he left the piano and sauntered to the French windows, which had been left open, for the night was warm, and passed out on to the terrace. He thought that he was done, and he lit a cigarette and leant against the stone railing, his eyelids drooping, his long lashes sweeping his hollow cheek. Music excites the performer as well as the listener, and his heart was beating quickly. While he had been singing his eyes had rested upon Judith Orme's profile. From her beauty he had drawn the inspiration which had enabled him to move his hearers as they had been moved. And now his heart was aching for her, as it always ached the moment he was out of her sight. At first he had fought against the passion which had taken possession of him, had tried to argue himself out of it; but he had long ceased Shore to succeed him here. You can't help observing this—the fuss Vane makes over the fellow."

"Well?" she said, after a pause.

Sir Chandos got out a cigar, but after a glance along the terrace, refrained from lighting it.

"Well," he said, shifting his small, tightly-shod feet uneasily. "Well, you can't be blind—no one could be to the fact that Julian Shore is—er—very much in love with you, my dear Judith."

"Well?" she said again and in exactly the same tone.

"Well! Bless my soul, you don't want me to point out that you ought to shift your objective. If you can't get the present king of the castle, why not—not make for the next?"

She laughed wearily.

"You talk as if Vane were an old man, on the brink of the grave."

"No, he's not an old man, but—well, accidents are always occurring," retorted Sir Chandos. "Look at the way Providence shot him into the title, and—and—well, I've a fancy Vane won't make old bones. He looks to me like a man who has ceased to take an interest in life, and by gad, when that's the case, life soon ceases to take an interest in the man! Then—then he is a reckless devil; you saw him riding that horse of his yesterday? It was a marvel he wasn't thrown. Mark my words, he'll break his neck some day!"

Her face went white in the darkness and her hands clenched each other.

"Until he does—" she began, then stopped.

"So what I say is," resumed Sir Chandos with the redundancy and emphasis of a half tipsy man, "keep the two strings to your bow, my dear girl. For instance, there's no need to treat Shore so cavalierly. He's a decent chap, he's fond of you, and it's my opinion that he'll come into this sooner or later—" He swept his hand across the view comprehensively. "At any rate, I'm dead certain that you're making no headway with Vane. Of course with your beauty—by gad, I'm as proud of it as you are!—you might marry anybody; but, well, you've got into the pace here and— Now, take my advice and think the matter over."

She laughed again.

"If I do not marry Vane, if I have lost him," she said, almost to herself, "it does not matter."

"That's what I say," her precious father caught her up, with an eager hiccup. "It's been my motto all my life—and a very prosperous life it's been—that, if you can't get the moon, good cream cheese is an admirable substitute. Now do be a sensible girl, my dear Judith!"

He stretched out a wavering hand to lay it upon her shoulder, but she shrank slightly but perceptibly, and

She stood motionless, had not heard him, she had suddenly become conscious words, she said, in a volubly emotionless:

"And you—you have of his cause!" she said swift her closed teeth.

the moment he was out of her sight. At first he had fought against the passion which had taken possession of him, had tried to argue himself out of it; but he had long ceased to struggle, and now surrendered himself as the demoniac surrenders to the spirit that enthralled it. And jealousy was adding another torture to that of unrequited love, for he had seen, almost on the first day, the day he had called on her with Vane, that she was in love with his cousin. Love makes the dullest man quick-witted and sharp-eyed where the woman he loves is concerned, and Julian had discovered that Judith was not heartless, as the world considered her, but that her heart had been given to Vane. Fate had willed that his cousin should not only step in between him and the Lesbrough peerage, but that he should stand between him and the woman whom he loved with an absorbing passion which was nearly akin to madness.

With a gesture of despair he flung the end of his cigarette away and went towards the end of the terrace. As he was descending the steps he saw Sir Chandos Orme coming out of the smoking-room where he had been for the brandy-and-soda which pulled him together after his dinner. At the same moment there was the frou-frou of a woman's dress, and one of the ladies stepped on to the terrace from the drawing-room, and Julian heard Sir Chandos say, cautiously:

"Is that you, Judith?"

Julian went softly down the steps and stood under the terrace listening.

"Yes, father; do you want me?" replied Judith, coming towards him. They stopped almost immediately above Julian, so that he could hear every word, though both father and daughter spoke in a low voice.

"Yes," said Sir Chandos with a slight hiccup. "Look here, Judith, I want to talk to you. I'm getting anxious, uneasy. You don't seem to be making much of this game—now, don't be offended and turn away like that. I won't have it! I've been a good father to you—"

She laughed with a kind of weary scorn.

"I am listening," she said, coldly.

"Well, then, I'll go further and say you seem to me to be making a mess of it. We've been down here—how long is it?—and you are no 'for-warder' than you were in London. I've got eyes in my head, of course, and I can see, anyone could see, that Lesbrough isn't in the least smitten. The man seems to be like a block of ice, confound him! 'Pears to me you've completely lost your old power over him—"

She went against the stone coping, her hands clasped tightly, her eyes fixed on the darkness.

"Now don't go over the old ground and tell me it's my fault, that's all past and gone."

"I was not going to do so," she said in a low voice. "It would be useless."

"Quite so," he asserted. "Nothing is more painful than that kind of—of bickering between father and daughter, especially when they understand each other as you and I do. What I wanted to say was that, in my opinion, Lesbrough isn't a marrying man, that he doesn't intend to marry; and that he intends this Julian mirable substitute. Now he'd be a sensible girl, my dear Judith!"

He stretched out a wavering hand to lay it upon her shoulder, but she shrank slightly but perceptibly, and Sir Chandos, carrying his hand to his moustache and murmuring, "I'll just go and get a drink. Too much salt in that last savoury," shuffled jauntily back to the smoking-room.

Julian, with a pale face and a throbbing heart, was stealing away when he heard another step on the terrace, and he waited. It was Vane's. Judith also heard it, and with a smothered sigh turned towards him.

"Who is it?" said Vane. "Ah, it's you!" as she moved into the light from the window. "Have you seen Julian? They want him for bridge."

"No," she said in the soft, low and deliciously musical note which always came into her voice when she spoke to him. He left the drawing-room some time ago."

"Gone into that den of his, I suppose. If so, it's useless to attempt to draw him. What a good fellow he is, isn't he?"

"Yes?" she said, half interrogatively, as if she knew he had a purpose in his praise.

"Such a—a likeable chap," said Vane with the awkwardness with which a man approaches a delicate subject. "And he's clever, too. The sort of man who would make his mark in the world if—if he had an object."

He lit a cigarette, tossing the match almost on to Julian, and smoked furiously for a moment or two.

"You—take a great interest in him," she said in so low a voice that Julian had to strain his ears.

"Rather!" assented Vane, "and naturally, seeing that he will follow me here."

"Will—follow you?" she repeated, mechanically.

Vane nodded. "Yes. I shall never marry." She moved out of the light and leant against the railing in her old attitude. "I'm one of those fellows who are better single."

"Ah, I understand!" she breathed with a long-drawn sigh.

Vane frowned and set his teeth.

"See here, Judith," he said in the tone of a man who has resolved to speak his mind and to spare neither himself nor his hearer, "I don't think you do. Of course I know you are thinking of the past—and our old engagement. You don't mind my speaking of it? Why should you?"

"Why should I?" she said in a still voice.

"Quite so. That's all past, and I don't want you to think you have anything to reproach yourself with. We—well, we made a mistake, that's all; and it was precious lucky for you that you discovered it before it was too late!"

"Was it I only who discovered it?" she asked.

Vane hesitated for a moment. It is never easy to tell a woman that you have ceased to love her.

"Let us say that you were the first to make the discovery," he said, gently. "We won't discuss it."

"No; it isn't necessary," she said in a strange voice, as if she were holding herself under control. "You have told me enough. I—jilted you, Vane; but—you found consolation. There is another woman!"

Vane did not start, but he set his teeth and his brows as if she had struck him. For a moment he was silent, then, looking straight before him, he said grimly:

"You are right, there is—there was another woman."

Her hand stole to her bosom and clutched the lace there. She had hoped against hope for a swift denial;

losing the control over her she had maintained by super-human effort. If Vane had sought for a modicum of himself for her treatment, he could not have found a more cruel or moment or two her lips with the rage—and, yes, I possessed her; but she hand to her lips and forced words back.

"You—mean well," she last. "Your cousin should grateful to you—"

"Then—then you are no You'll think it over, and little kinder to Julian? gravely, earnestly.

"I will think it over, Shore shall have no cause of plain of my unkindness." Then suddenly she laughed, but so strangely that she looked at her with surprise; for as he had love her, as his heart there on the Fairy Isle, suspicion that she still him: had she not left him free will?

"What—what is the man asked with all the densest straightforward man.

"Nothing," she replied, dying suddenly and her more impassive and emotion was only thinking how he performed your task; that had known the truth I spared myself some, as quite unnecessary remorse. Past, our past, is past say—"

"Quite, quite," he said. "Shall we go in now? T chirily."

"Thanks, no; I should maintain a little longer naturally, like to be alone t—Mr. Julian Shore."

Vane regarded her with a casiness, then, having I say, said nothing, but with nod of acquiescence, went house.

She stood for a moment, he had left her, then, supped self by the rail, moved slowly end of the terrace; there, the light of the windows, up her hands to her face a back the moan of wounded outraged love, of the worst tion which a woman can avowed indifference of the loves. "His hand across his brow. Let it rest," he said. "I did not want to speak but—Julian."

"And motionless, as if she heard him, then as if she suddenly become conscious of his said, in a voice absoluteless: "Julian Shore?"

"Judith, he—has fallen in love." "You—have come to plead?" she said swiftly through teeth.

"Come to plead his cause," he said, resolutely. "It's like my love you think? But, consider, it is of my kith and kin; I am fond of him; and I to see him suffer. The poor got thin and worn—oh, now, you must know! I you are going to say: right speak for himself. But the last man to do that case. quietly as before. "And it is true. I love you—ah, do not speak—yet! I love you. Is it a crime to do so? Then I am the greatest of criminals, and I throw myself at your mercy. But he—ah, well, I have listened; there is no need to remind you. Vane does not count. You are less than nothing to him."

She put up her hands as if, indeed, she were about to strike him, but he did not move, and his dark eyes did not quail before the lightning in hers.

"While I—God, how I love you! You are just my whole life and soul!"

"You love me?" she said gliding closer to him. "Prove it! Prove it!"

"Tell me how—"

"Thrash him! Thrash him within an inch of his life!" she hissed.

He smiled, and the smile was like a douche of ice on her fury.

"No," he said as if in response to quite an ordinary, every-day proposition. "That would be a cheap kind of melodrama; and I should be the one who would be thrashed; Vane is a stronger man—" He shrugged his shoulders.

"You are a coward!" she said, her bosom heaving, her lips twitching. "You prate of love like—an actor, and a bad one; but you stand by and see the woman you say you love insulted. But you want my answer to your kind proposal—your cousin's kind proposal, coward! Take it then! I will marry you the day you reign here as master instead of dependent, the hanger on you are."

He caught her by both wrists and leant forward, his breath coming as fast as hers, his eyes sinking into her own.

"I accept your conditions," he said, hoarsely. She shrank back, but he still held her. "You made it in jest, in mockery—"

She watched him closely, hungrily,

a swift movement of her thin fingers. "Is there anything else?" "No, no, nothing," he signed. "You can go now."

She turned, then paused and looked at him. "Are you sure there is nothing else? You are not looking well; you are looking as if you were ill. Is there nothing Deborah can do? You would trust me, sir?"

"Yes, yes," he said, impatiently. "What should there be? I am quite well. Have you made up the fire?"

"Yes, Mr. Julian."

"Well, then, you may go. Here—take this cat with you."

She went for the cat, but it eluded her and crept closer to Julian.

"Oh, never mind, then," he said, impatiently. "Let it be. How hot the room is! It is the fire, I suppose. Open the ventilator, please."

She went to the lever and opened with difficulty the window in the top of the wall.

"It wants a new rope," she signed. Julian nodded irritably. "Yes, yes, I'll see to it."

She glanced at him, with the devotion of the spaniel, waited a moment to see if there were any other orders, then left the room, carefully closing the hermetically sealed door after her.

Julian leant back and sipped his tea. His heart was beating fiercely, his brain was in a whirl. The melodramatic scene in which he had played a principal part danced before him. His lips had touched hers, Judith's! She had promised to be his wife! His wife! He closed his eyes and a smile curved his lips.

But the condition! That he should reign as master at Leithborough. He had accepted it in the moment of excitement, of passionate ecstasy, as he would have accepted it if it had been the advent of the millennium. Was there any condition, any stipulation, which he would not have accepted?

His! That beautiful woman he loved with a passion that absorbed his whole being. Her kiss, cold and fierce as it had been, burnt on his lips and still thrilled him. His! Judith, the loveliest woman on earth, the one woman to be desired of all others. His passion left no room for thought of Vane, who had

She shrank from him as he drew

"Take it!" she whispered.

He bent his head slowly and kissed her on the lips. With a low cry she broke from him and sped up the steps; but on the terrace she turned and looked down on him with a strange expression in her eyes, an expression in which fear and hate and the longing for revenge fought for predominance.

Julian stood looking up at her, at the spot on which she had stood,
with glowing eyes, while one could count twenty; then he went softly round the house, unlocked a door in a wall and passing through the small yard—it had once been a ladies' garden, but was now moss and weed-grown—on which the laboratory looked—unlocked the laboratory door with his chub-key and entered the room.

There was an air of comfort about the apartment. The walls were colored a dark maroon, the woodwork was of walnut, beautifully polished, there were pictures on the walls, and a baby grand piano; but its scientific purpose had not been forgotten. Vane, with the generosity which characterized him at all times,
but never more than in his dealings
with Julian, had given him carte-blanche, and Julian had transformed
the Witches' room into a model laboratory. The room was sound and air-proof, and ventilated by a casement in the roof which could be opened a quarter of an inch or thrown wide so that the fumes from the crucibles and chemical retorts could escape in a few moments. The walls were covered with a composition which resisted the corrosive effects of the noxious fumes on which Vane so often animadverted. A draught, even a breath of air, is often fatal to a chemical experiment, so Julian had contrived that the room should be rendered absolutely hermetically sealed by the closing of the ventilator, which was worked, on the simplest principle, by a couple of ropes, passing over a pulley, which he could control by a lever fixed under his writing table.

As he entered he saw, by the light from the furnace, the bent figure of Deborah. She was moving about the room in her noiseless way, a tortoiseshell cat, which had attached itself
to her, following her as noiselessly and rubbing against her. A silver tea equipage stood on a small table
near the furnace, and as Julian entered she pointed to it.

Julian nodded and sank into the easy-chair near the table, and Deborah stood quite motionless and as waiting for his commands, her full grey eyes fixed on his as a dog's is fixed upon his master.

Julian wiped the sweat from his brow and poured himself out a cup of tea, as if unconscious of her presence, then he looked at her and said, on his fingers:

"Deborah, keep away from the front of the house. Sir Chandos Orme has seen you—and spoken to me."

"Yes, Mr. Julian," she replied with Judith, the loveliest woman on earth, the one woman to be desired

of all others. His passion left no room for thought of Vane, who had pleaded his, Julian's, cause. Some natures are incapable of gratitude, and Julian's was one of them. He put Vane's advocacy aside as if it had not occurred. All his thoughts, his heart, were bent on Judith.

And he would call her his when he reigned as master at Lesborough! It did not occur to him to doubt her promise, for that promise had been dictated by jealousy and hate, and they are stronger and more binding
than love.

When he was master! That meant
when Vane was dead, and he, Julian, reigned in his stead.

But Vane was alive, was but a little the elder of Julian. No matter.
He had her promise; there was hope for him. All sorts of accidents might happen, as Sir Chandos, with his worldly wisdom, had said. Vane might be killed in the hunting field;
a careless shot in the—

He wiped the sweat from his forehead again and looked round the room. His eyes fell upon the crucible on the spirit furnace, and the lover gave place, for the moment, to the scientist. He rose and went to the furnace. The liquid in the pot was emitting a bluish flame, a strange and pungent odor, so dense and penetrating that, as he bent over it, it caught his breath and made it difficult.

He looked round the room. The ventilator was half closed; his hand went to the lever which admitted or closed the air; but he shut the ventilator, and stood for a moment as if considering deeply. Then he went to a cupboard, took out a length of muslin, and, after soaking it in a liquid which he prepared in a bowl,
wrapped it round his mouth and nostrils.

NATURE'S ESSENCE... Extracted From Forest Plants.

Nature's laws are perfect, but disease follows if these laws are not obeyed. Go straight to nature for the cure, to the forest; there are mysteries here that we can fathom for you. Take the bark of the wild-cherry tree, the root of mandrake, stone, Oregon grape root, queen's root, bloodroot and golden seal, make a scientific, non-alcoholic extract of them with just the right proportions and you have

Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It took Dr. Pierce, with the assistance of two learned chemists, eight years of hard work experimenting to make this pure glyceric extract and alterative of the greatest efficiency and without the use of a particle of alcohol.

E. WILLIAMS, ESQ.

Just the sort of remedy you need to make rich, red blood, and cure that lassitude and feeling of nerve exhaustion. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery bears the stamp of PUBLIC APPROVAL and has sold more largely in the past forty years than any other blood purifier and stomach tonic.

"Some time ago I got out of health—my stomach seemed to be the seat of the trouble," writes Mr. EZRA WILLIAMS, of Belleville, Kans. "I commenced to doctor with all the doctors at home as well as with other specialists on stomach and digestive organs. None seemed to do any good—in fact, most of the medicines did me harm. Finally, I wrote to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., who replied, stating that I had liver complaint with indigestion and constipation, and advised Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets.' 'The Discovery' and 'Pellets,' have 'put me on my feet again'—seemed to be just what I needed. I could not have recovered without them."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are for liver ills.

Wear Slippers in the House.

In England it is the custom not only for grown persons, but also for children, to wear slippers in the house. English children as well as grownups wear shoes as we in America wear rubbers, only out of doors. This is not only a more comfortable custom with regard to footwear than ours, but it is also more healthful. The streets and sidewalks and even the yards are dusty. This dust, full of germs as it is, should not be tracked all over the house. We would do well in the interests of preventive medicine to provide slippers for our children and to insist upon the wearing of them in the house. It is less trouble to change from shoes to slippers, even three or four times a day, than it is to cure an illness the germ of which may have been brought into the nursery on the soles of the children's shoes.—Home Progress.

The Herb of Ferocity.

If you have any reason to suspect that you are too mild mannered, too gentle for this strenuous age, eat catmint. Miss F. A. Bardswell in her book "The Herb Garden" says catmint, one of the ten varieties of mint, is known as the herb of ferocity because of the ferocious disposition it imparts. "The herb when chewed," says Miss Bardswell, "is said to make the most gentle person fierce and quarrelsome. A legend is extant of a certain executioner who could never muster up his courage to the point of hanging till he had partaken of it."

Crushed Again.

"If I have a fault," said Mr. Henpeck, "it is that"—

"If you have 'a' fault?" Mrs. Henpeck broke in. "Ha, ha! Excuse me for laughing. If I have a fault it is that I sometimes permit my sense of humor to get the better of me."—Chicago Record-Herald.

PRESS COMMENTS.

Brantford Expositor—We now know why Mr. Bourassa went off to Europe. He knew what was coming.

Stratford Beacon—The wants of Toronto must be many, for one of its papers last Saturday published sixteen pages of them. But its greatest want is broad-mindedness.

Hamilton Times—Lord Hastings has found a mare's nest. Lloyd-George's aunt is said to have been a cook! Shocking! And Lloyd-George does not exhibit the slightest shame.

Victoria Colonist—It is officially stated that the product of crops increases more rapidly than the population. Yet the cost of living advances. The only explanation seems to be that people eat more than they used to, and this is probably quite true.

Ottawa Journal—There should be a Provincial board independent of the Government and of political considerations, with full power to appoint and dismiss local boards or dispense with them altogether. The only wonder at present is that more scandals do not occur in connection with license administration.

St. John Telegraph and Sun—In Germany and the United States, the chief industrial high tariff countries, unemployment has been far more widespread in recent years than in Great Britain. High tariffs never have guaranteed, and never will guarantee, the workman steady employment.

Vancouver Sun—There is something almost feline, then, in the cruelty of Mr. McBride towards Mr. Borden in the dismal plight in which he finds him. The resolution of last session on the naval matters was embarrassing enough. But not content with that, we find him still further tormenting his victim in London itself and at the very doors of the Admiralty.

Vancouver Province—The 'lure of the West' is drawing the best and brainiest from the East. The Hon. A. G. MacKay, former Liberal leader in the Ontario Legislature, is coming to Edmonton to open a law office. In addition to being a lawyer of ability Mr.

THE MOTH MILLER.

Watch Out For This Insidious Little Destroyer.

We are all familiar with the moth miller seen flitting about in the early dusk during late spring and early summer. If when a closet door opens a number of these moths flutter out we may rest assured that mischief has been brewing there. Not that this moth itself has done or can do any injury. Its work is to lay the little white eggs in fur or wool, wherever it can find a place. These eggs hatch twice (during the spring and early summer) into tiny grubs or caterpillars, and they do the mischief.

Almost the first work of the caterpillar after hatching from the egg is to eat holes in the material on which it nests. With that wool or fur it eats is spun a little sheath or cocoon, and this sheath shows as the insect grows. After awhile it leaves its cocoon and hatches into a moth.

The period of development depends upon the temperature. In this climate there are two hatching times in one season. But the insect is sensitive to cold and does not develop unless the temperature is above 60 degrees; hence has come the practice of placing furs and valuable rugs in cold storage, where, if already infected with eggs, no hatching can take place.

It behooves all home keepers to put all winter clothing away early—before these little pests get busy. In houses that are kept too warm there is danger of constant hatching of eggs, but, as a general rule, they do not hatch till early spring.

To prevent all moth eating clothing should while the days are yet cool be thoroughly cleaned, brushed and aired in the sun and whipped so that any eggs may be dislodged. They should then be put away in some way that will keep the air from them.

Paper bags sealed at the top and boxes with covers sealed with strips of paper are best for furs and feathers. Newspapers and cotton cloths are excellent to wrap garments in, as moths will not touch either.

Carpets and rugs need particular attention and should be given frequent beatings in the sunlight. Many people spray all clothing with gasoline before putting away for the summer, and carpets and rugs may safely be treated in this way. Camphor and moth balls are of absolutely no use if eggs are in the garments when they are put away. The only use of camphor is that it repels the moth by its odor and no moth will go near it.

Mrs. Burnett's Marmalade Recipe.

Friends who have been guests of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett at Plandome, her Long Island home, are enthusiastic over her delicious marmalade, a specialty of the house.

The following recipe for its making was unselfishly given by Mrs. Burnett's sister:

One large orange, one lemon, one grapefruit. Clean the fruit thoroughly with brush and water; cut in halves, remove all seeds and as much of the white skin as possible (do not peel). Then put through the meat chopper.

To one cupful of pulp add three cupfuls of water. Put in skillet and boil up quickly to skim off the froth. Set

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Completely Cured Our Little Boy of Fits."

A family can suffer no greater affliction than to have a child subject to fits or epilepsy. Many a father or mother would give their all to restore such a child to health.

"I am heartily glad to tell you of our little boy who was completely cured of fits. He commenced having them at 10 years of age and had them for four years. I tried three doctors and one specialist but all of them said he could not be cured, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills made a complete cure. He is now hale, hearty and gay. It has been three years since he had the last spell. I shall give Dr. Miles' medicines praise wherever I go. the West is drawing the best and brainiest from the East. The Hon. A. G. MacKay, former Liberal leader in the Ontario Legislature, is coming to Edmonton to open a law office. In addition to being a lawyer of ability Mr. MacKay is a debater of the first rank and will make his presence felt in our neighboring Province.

Halifax Chronicle—Hon. Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, whom we are delighted to welcome to Nova Scotia, came into our peaceful and workaday community yesterday to the roar of saluting guns—seventeen of them—from the Citadel. This is somewhat out of the ordinary, but our new War Minister is a warrior bold, and, of course, he likes to hear the cannons thunder.

Vancouver News-Advertiser—The banks of Canada are especially prosperous at the present time. The cost of living has increased enormously. But the salary of bank clerks has not risen in proportion. Integrity cannot be purchased, but the banks may well consider whether it would not pay to increase the salaries of their clerks and thus lessen the temptation to dissatisfaction and dishonesty.

Edmonton Bulletin—It may be that the lessons of Canada and South Africa have been laid to heart by the Englishman better than most people imagine, and he has come to the conclusion that Ireland is more likely to repeat the moral than disprove it. Local self-government has increased, and not diminished, the loyal affection of overseas Britishers for the old land and its people. If Ireland is peopled by Irishmen the effect there must be similar.

Saskatoon Phoenix—Hon. George E. Foster thinks Canadian manufacturers should do more to build up a foreign trade. The nearest foreign market for Canadian manufactures is close to their factory doors, but they evidently prefer to hold fast to the Canadian market, where they have nothing to fear from competition, and Hon. Geo. E. Foster concurred in that preference a few months ago. If he was sincere then, what is he now?

London Free Press—We do not now tolerate filthy paper, except it be this paper money. Let a piece of paper become soiled to the extent of one fraction of the clinging dirt found upon nine-tenths of Canadian paper money and it would quickly find its way to the waste-paper basket and thence to the furnace. But year in and year out we go on using the worn and ugly old bank note which the prosperous bank managements of Canada persist in giving us in lieu of sparkling gold.

Kingston Whig—Toronto has a pretty row in progress over the charges of the Hydro-Electric Commission. The Queen city has practically been denied a voice on the management of the civic electric department. The Commission is running the water-works, is making the cost of pumping excessive, and is refusing the council the right to audit the accounts. Kingston will do well to investigate this before it makes a contract with the commission.

The next day add one cupful of sugar to one of juice and again get it to the boiling point quickly for a second skimming. After this boil slowly for about three hours or until it has thickened to marmalade consistency.

GROWERS WARNED

A warning has been sounded in regard to a very dangerous disease that has been introduced into Canada in tubers imported during the present year, which is known as Potato Rot, recently discovered in an shipment. To warn Canadians against the danger of imported seed, the Director of Agricultural Farms has issued a circular as "Farmers' Circular" numbered by Mr. H. T. Gussow, on Botany which contains the following points:—The only way in which the disease is introduced is through the affected tubers. The use of diseased tubers for seed in the worst cases, result in the destruction of the entire crop.

Once introduced the disease infests the soil for a period of years, which means that for many years no sound potatoes can be raised on land thus infected. One of the known remedies for the disease will prevent the spread of the disease. The disease is spread readily

The Buccaneers.
Originally buccaneers were peaceful English, French and Dutch settlers in the Spanish West Indies, and they received their name on account of their custom of drying their meat, in the Indian fashion, on a buccan, or hurdle. The Spaniards resented strongly the intrusion of these foreigners and made many attempts to oust them, but the buccaneers were a hardy set of men and crack shots with the musket, so they successfully resisted all the Spaniards' attacks and obstinately remained in the islands. What it was that caused the buccaneers to abandon their comparatively peaceful mode of living and take to piracy it is hard to say. Possibly the constant harrying to which they were subjected by the Spaniards prompted them to retaliate; but, whatever the reason, their depredations soon rendered the passage of the Caribbean sea an undertaking of extreme danger to merchantmen, and the word buccaneer has come down as a synonym for robbery, murder and all the vices.

Some Delicious Ways of Serving Ripe Bananas.

Bananas en Surprise.—A quart of cream or custard, half a pound of sugar, three-quarters of a pint of banana pulp, the yellow rind of a lemon, strained juice of half a lemon and salpicon of candied cherries and pineapple. Scald the cream with the lemon rind and sugar, strain, let it cool and partially freeze, then add the banana pulp mixed with the sirup and lemon juice and finish freezing. Have ready chilled, fresh looking banana skins, injured as little as possible in removing the pulp; fill these with the frozen mixture, putting a tablespoonful of the salpicon in the center of each. Press the strip of skin back in place and put in freezer buried in equal parts of ice and salt for an hour and a quarter. For the salpicon cut the fruit in very small dice, mix with a little thick sirup flavored to taste. When serving tie each banana with a bow of narrow ribbon.

Banana Cream.—Four bananas, three-quarters of an ounce of powdered gelatin, three ounces of sugar, three-quarters of a pint of milk, half a pint of whipped cream, strained juice of a lemon, a tablespoonful of brandy and sliced bananas and whipped cream for garnishing. Skin the four bananas and rub them through a fine sieve. Dissolve the gelatin in the milk, add the sugar, banana pulp and lemon juice. Allow it to cool a little and stir in the whipped cream and the brandy. As soon as it begins to set pour the mixture into a ring mold previously rinsed in cold water. Unmold, fill the center with the whipped cream, and decorate with the sliced bananas.

Goethe's Birthday.

In August, 1818, Goethe went to Carlsbad for the cure and placed himself under the care of Dr. Rehbein. One morning when he rose he requested Charles, his domestic, to place a bottle of red wine and a glass in each of the two windows in the room.

Then the poet walked round and round the apartment, stopping at each window to drink a glass of wine. When he had nearly emptied the bottles the doctor arrived. "Ah," said Goethe, "you are come. Do you know it is my birthday?" "No," said the doctor, "it is not your birthday. It falls tomorrow."

Only the production of the almanac could convince Goethe that he was a day out in his reckoning. When he discovered his mistake he gave vent to a strong expression and, after a long pause, turning to the doctor, said, "Then I have got drunk for nothing."

Beware of Cousins.

Cousins are not as simple as they seem. The very fact of being a cousin or having a cousin is complicated. The laissez faire of cousinship is both eluding and deluding. Cousins will be cousins even if you did not choose them. They can borrow money from you, visit you without being asked, tell people they belong to your family, contest your will, even fall in love with you, and a cousin once removed is twice as apt to. Never completely trust a cousin; never depend on his not doing any of these things; never take him for granted. The "cousinly kiss" may, or may not mean what it means, and cousins always do kiss. It's part of being cousins.

Not that cousins need necessarily prove perilous. Once in a blue moon they invite you to Europe or leave you money, but that almost takes an aunt or uncle.—Atlantic.

CHRIS. P. PENDALL TAKES OWN LIFE.

COMMITTS SUICIDE BY DRINKING CARBOLIC ACID.

BROODED OVER WIFE'S DEATH

[The following full description of the sad death of Chris. Pendall is taken from a Watertown paper.]

Christopher J. Pendall, aged 41 years, for many years a plumber and tinmith of this city, ended his life Sunday night by drinking carbolic acid at his apartments in the Rothstock block. He lived ten minutes after taking the poison. Mr. Pendall was widely known about the city by the nickname "Son."

Despondency over the death of his wife, which occurred in October, 1910, resulted in melancholia, and he began drinking. This, with mourning over his wife's death, is said to have mentally deranged him.

It was very soon after his wife's death that Pendall started to drink very heavily. His employer, George H. Mowe, was aware of the fact and in an endeavor to have him stop told him at different times that unless he quit he would have to leave the place. He was always a good workman, being one of the best plumbers in the shop when he was sober.

About a week ago he left the employ of Mr. Mowe, and started upon a protracted drunk. All efforts of his relatives to locate him proved futile until Saturday night, when he was found in an intoxicated condition.

Late Saturday night, his brother-in-law, Archie Greer, was walking past the plumbing shop in Arsenal street. He saw Pendall in the window. The store was dark and he thought it queer that he should be there and went in to see what the trouble was. Greer asked Pendall what was the matter and he replied that he was sick and had not eaten anything for five days. Greer offered to get a room in the Sisters Hospital for Pendall and have him stay there until he was well, but Pendall did not wish to go to the hospital. Greer stated that Pendall was not drunk at the time. He asked Pendall if he would not go down to the house at 4 Hungerford Place and his wife, who was Pendall's sister, would make him some soup. He agreed and later asked Greer for some tobacco. He had none and Pendall left saying he would go to Greer's house. He went at once through the alleyway by the opera house and after getting some tobacco at Carpenter's pool room, went to the house where Greer found him later.

Greer started home and met his wife on Court street. He told her about Pendall and requested her to get some soup that would be good for an invalid and they went home. There they found Pendall reading. He ate the soup which Mrs. Greer prepared and later went to bed.

Sunday he remained around the house reading and smoking. Early Sunday evening he left the house. He started for the shop in Arsenal street and on the way was met by Miss Pearl Pendall, a niece, who has been governess for his three year-old daughter. She asked him where he was going and he told her. She was suspicious at that time of something being wrong. He told her he was going to the shop to figure up his time. She asked if she might go along and he gave his consent. They went to the shop and he computed his time. As they were leaving he said to her, "If I don't get that money you may have it." This made her more suspicious and after meeting Robert Dowd she accompanied Pendall to his rooms in the Rothstock block. This was about 9.30 Sunday evening.

The Fire, Water and Light Committee reported re the changing of lights in Clarksville and South Napanee. As to the lights in Clarksville the committee recommended no change. The arc light in South Napanee, and the one at the power house they recommended removal. The Rothstock block. This was about 9:30 Sunday evening.

When they arrived there they sat down and talked for about an hour. About 10:20 Pendall got up from his chair and taking a bottle from the mantel said, "I guess I'll have a drink." Miss Pendall asked him what it was. He said it was oil of wintergreen and asked her if she would like some. She said, "You had better give that to me," but he would not do so. He then started for the bathroom. He remained there a minute and when he came out he gave her the bottle saying, "Here, you wanted that so bad you can have what's left." Miss Pendall smelled of it and knew it was not wintergreen. Speaking of it later Miss Pendall said, "I did not know what it was, but I knew it was not wintergreen."

Mr. Dowd, who had been witnessing the affair, took the bottle and hurried to the barber shop conducted by Mr. Greer a few doors below in Court streets. There he found Mr. Greer and Frank Redmond. He hurriedly told the story and Redmond went to the drug store conducted by William George for some alcohol to be used as an emetic. Mr. Greer would not sell any alcohol without a doctor's prescription and Redmond ran out. Meanwhile Greer had been telephoning for different doctors. He found Dr. G. B. VanDoren in the restaurant of Arthur Strobeck in the Fairbanks block. Dr. VanDoren hurried to his home for a stomach pump, but when he returned he found Pendall dead. He had died within ten minutes after he had taken the poison.

Coroner Herbert L. Smith was summoned and view the remains. The remains taken to the Guilfoyle Co.'s undertaking parlors.

It is believed that Pendall had contemplated the deed for some time. Since his illness, during which he had eaten nothing for five days, he repeatedly told the Greers that there was nothing for him to live for. Mr. Greer stated that Pendall had been a total abstainer until the death of his wife.

Mr. Pendall was born in Napanee, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Pendall. When a young man he moved to this city and learned the tinsmith's trade, working at various times for several plumbers of the city. Eighteen years ago he entered the employ of George H. Mowe and it was stated that he was one of the best workmen in the city.

A few years ago he was married and about three years ago a child was born, Edna May. Mrs. Pendall was, however, a rather frail woman and she died little over a year later, the cause of death being heart failure.

Mr. Pendall was a member of the Water-ton Lodge of Elks and was a Forester.

He leaves his infant daughter, Edna May; one sister, Mrs. Archie Greer of this city, and one brother, Joshua Pendall of Napanee.

It is expected that a delegation from both the Forester and the Elks will be in attendance at the funeral.

Shake the bottle and take as directed and in 48 hours Four T's will shake your cold. Look for the four red T's. Price 25c.

Room Enough Inside One's Head to Hide Bulky Articles.

Every one is not aware that there is space inside a person's head for storing away heavy and bulky foreign articles. One man who had made a specialty of burglary and jail breaking now shows how he was aided in his work by utilizing this human attic storage room. He concealed a large skeleton key and a saw twelve inches long, coiled like a watch spring, in the cavity reached through his nostrils. But in the London Lancet Dr. Rushton Parker relates izing this human attic storage room. He concealed a large skeleton key and a saw twelve inches long, coiled like a watch spring, in the cavity reached through his nostrils. But in the London Lancet Dr. Rushton Parker relates a more remarkable case of the carrying of a large foreign body in that space of the head, and that without the victim knowing that his head was so filled up and weighted down.

A young farmer consulted Dr. Parker at the Liverpool hospital for a nasal abscess that had troubled him some time. Probing the nostril, the surgeon found that a loose mass, apparently of metal, occupied a considerable space behind the nose and above the roof of the mouth.

So large was this object that it was removed with difficulty through the side of the face. It proved to be a gun breech and an iron bolt. The breech measured 3 by 1½ by 1 inches. The bolt was three inches long. The weight of the two was a quarter of a pound. This mass of metal had been in the man's head for five years, though he had not suspected its presence there. A muzzle loading gun had exploded in his hands and shattered his face. The wound healed without leaving any outward deformity. His only affliction was symptoms of a nasal catarrh. The young farmer made a rapid recovery to perfect health with the removal of the iron from his head.

For Cat Owners.

We cautioned cat owners recently, says The Animals' Friend, against handing over their animals to be killed by irresponsible people. In the train the other day we overheard a lady telling her companion how she had given a man 60 cents, with another 60 cents for himself, to get her cat mercifully put to sleep, as she was going abroad for a long time, and did not know where to find him a good home. Two years afterwards, when she had returned home, she was surprised to see the cat walk in, still quite alive. The man had presumably pocketed the $1.20 and possibly sold the cat or turned him adrift, and who knows what adventures he may have gone through before finding his way home again.

The Honey Bird.

This bird is found in the Transvaal and derives its name from its great liking for honey. So fond is it of honey that it will guide persons—and, I believe, certain animals—to a wild bees' nest. It usually perches in a tree over the person or animal, and makes its call, "Zet-lood!" People knowing the bird follow it; the bird, flying a few yards ahead, almost always unseen, perches in a tree and continues calling.

When it arrives over or near the nest of bees, it ceases calling, and waits until the bees have been robbed, expecting to get the honey left for itself. It is said by old people that these birds have been known to lead persons to where a dangerous snake was lying.

Cedar Is Going.

The cedar will practically be exterminated in Canada in a few years. It requires from 170 to 200 years to produce the average cedar pole, which, if not chemically treated, will decay and become useless in fourteen years. Up to the present time poles used in Canada receive no protection against decay in that portion coming into contact with the soil, and as a consequence the poles are useless in a few years.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL May 20.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market receipts of live stock for the week ending May 18 were 800 cattle, 275 sheep and lambs, 1650 hogs and 1200 calves. The offerings on the market this morning for sale were 450 cattle, 500 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 150 calves.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle since last Wednesday, the feeling being strong. Prices were fully maintained at the late advance, owing to the very limited supplies coming forward, which is attributed to the scarcity of finished stock in the country, on account of the fact that American buyers have been operating actively of late thruout Ontario for supplies for export account, on account of the high prices ruling in the Chicago market. Indications are now that supplies for the local market will run slow until grass-fed cattle are in fit condition to be marketed, and the prospects are that there will be somewhat of a scarcity of beef for the time being, as all the surplus stock has been well cleaned up. The gathering of buyers was fairly large, and, as they were all short of beef, the demand was good, and an active trade was done, with sales of choice steers at $8 to $8.25 per 100 pounds, while bulls of good quality brought as high as $7.

A much stronger feeling developed in the market for hogs, and prices advanced 25c to 40c per 100 pounds, owing to the small run and the keen competition between buyers for supplies, and the prospects are that they will go still higher in

QUALITY OF MI

It Can Easily Be Determined by the Candle Test.

Here is a very simple way to test the quality of the milk you buy. First stir the milk well in order to disseminate into the liquid the cream which comes to the surface. The time of milk is poured into a measure of water—one fluid ounce and a half pints. A candle is placed in a dark room. Take a drinking glass with a tallow and even bottom and hold it above the candle at a distance of about one foot from it, so that you are able to see the flame of the candle through the bottom of the glass. Pour slowly the diluted milk into the glass.

The flame becomes less visible as the level of the liquid rises in the glass. The flame is soon reduced to a dull white spot. A little more milk is slowly added, so as to avoid an excess, and the flame becomes absolutely invisible. All that is to be done is to measure the liquid in the glass, this is conveniently ascertained by inserting into it a strip of pasteboard, measuring the wet part. The measure must not be over one inch. If the milk is pure. With good quality, the flame will be about seven-eighths of an inch before the flame is lost to the mixture of one volume of milk to half a volume of water shall be a depth of one and a half inches. Indicate partially skimmed milk or of one volume of good milk to one volume of water, and so on.

The process is based upon the relation between the opacity and the number of fatty globules contained in it. Both skin the adding of water work in the same direction—namely, to decrease the opacity of milk. The same is said of the density. Skimmed milk creases it. Adding water decreases it. The common test that the mere introduction of a densimeter in milk is worthless. Skimmed milk may have a density if care has been taken into it a certain amount of water. New York World.

As to the horror of death—this the spectators may have. But it is the rarest phenomenon for him who is about to die to "suffer" death. EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE.

Its Massive Vertical Base Checks the Wildest Seas.

The Eddystone rocks form a very dangerous reef, lying in the English channel about fourteen miles from Plymouth, and here, in 1695, Henry Winstanley built the first lighthouse, which lasted but eight years.

Winstanley's tower was swept away by a tremendous storm, and every one in it at the time, including the builder, was drowned. Three years later Rudder's tower was built, only to be destroyed by fire in 1755, and then came John Smeaton's.

Modern lighthouses really date from 1759, when this third one was completed. Smeaton's design was faulty, but it served as a model for lighthouse construction in masonry, which has been followed in its general features ever since. This lighthouse stood for over a century, but it was not high enough to keep the waves from dashing the lantern and so was removed and the present one built in 1882 by James Douglass.

At the time of the completion of the new lighthouse two bells weighing two tons each and struck by mechanical power were installed for fog signaling purposes. Since that date an explosive gun cotton fog signal has been erected, the bells being removed. Probably the most interesting thing about the lighthouse now on the Eddystone is its solid vertical base. Heavy seas striking the massive cylindrical structure are immediately broken up and rush around to the opposite side, spray alone ascending to the height of the lantern gallery. On the other hand, waves striking the old tower at its foundation ran up the surface, which presented a curved face to the waves, and, unimpeded by any projection until arriving at the lantern gallery, were partially broken up by the cornice and then spent themselves in heavy spray over the lantern. The shock to which the cornice of the gallery was exposed was so great that stones were sometimes lifted from their beds.—Lookout.

A HARD WINTER.

When the Mercury Fell to Six Feet Nine Inches Below Zero.

They were talking about hard winters. The man on the cracker barrel said he remembered a winter when the mercury fell to six feet nine inches below zero, and consequently he had never seen any weather since then that he could call real cold.

"Oh, you pshaw!" said the man with the ginger whiskers. "Six feet nine inches! Oh, you pshaw!"

"Meaning that I put you in mind of Ananias?" said the man on the cracker barrel.

The man with the ginger whiskers simply said: "Six feet nine inches! Oh, you pshaw!"

"Then listen," said the man on the cracker barrel. "It was the winter when no snow fell. Nothing fell but the thermometer that winter. We kept our thermometer hanging on a cherry tree in the yard to give it a chance. One morning the weather had been so cold the mercury went down below zero as far as it could and let the thermometer have the credit of showing it, but it couldn't do its duty by the weather by pausing there, so it busted the bulb at the bottom and kept on falling. The thermometer was six feet above the ground. We dug the mercury out in the spring, nine inches below the surface. So until you can trot out some weather that is six feet and nine inches below, don't talk to me about cold!"

The man on the cracker barrel lit his pipe and went out, and the man with the ginger whiskers just said, "Oh, he pshaw!"—New York Press.

Back in the Good Old Bowl Days.

A man of apparent means brought two boys into a barber shop for a haircut. While waiting for the completion of the job, he said:

"I never sat in a barber's chair when I was a kid. My brother used to go over to the engine house and borrow the horse clippers. Then my mother would put a bowl on my head and cut around it. Until I was twelve years old, I always looked like a window washer's brush."—Chicago Post.

"They ought to, my child."

QUALITY OF MILK.

May Be Determined by Using the Candle Test.

A very simple way in which the quality of the milk you stir the milk with a spoon to disseminate into the whole cream which may have the surface. Then one volume of milk is poured into fifty volume of water—one fluid ounce to two pints. A candle is lighted in a room. Take an ordinary glass with a tolerably flat bottom and hold it right over the candle at a distance of one foot from it, so as to be in the flame of the candle at the bottom of the glass. Then pour the diluted milk into the glass. The flame becomes less bright as the liquid rises into the glass. The flame is soon reduced to a spot. A little more liquid is added, so as to avoid pouring and the flame becomes abnormally visible. All that remains to do is to measure the height of the flame in the glass, this being most easily ascertained by dipping a strip of pasteboard and then the wet part. It should not be over one inch if the milk is of good quality. With good quality milk, the depth of the flame is about seven-eighths of an inch. A small volume of milk and a small volume of water should show a difference of one and a half inches. A difference of two inches indicates either skimmed milk or a mixture of good milk and one and so on.

The test is based upon the close relation between the opacity of milk and the number of fatty corpuscles in it. Both skimming and the addition of water work in the same way, namely, to decrease the density of the milk. The same cannot be said of the density. Skimming increases it. Adding water decreases it. A common test that consists in the introduction of the lactometer in milk is worthless, as milk may have a normal density and have been taken to pour a certain amount of water.—World.

How to Make Over Last Summer's Kimono Gowns.

CRASH TOWELING FOR FROCKS

Scalloped Edges on Costumes High in Fashion's Favor—Fichu Draperies Give Rejuvenating Air to Old Dresses, Leap Year Party With Amusing Stunts.

Dear Elsa—Ever since Lent began I have had the time of my life dress-making—that is, making up little frocks for the summer that are so expensive to have made out of the house by a really good woman. Now that the width of skirts has been definitely settled it is perfectly safe to begin on one's summer wardrobe, although we are shivering with cold here in our New York apartment. And the sleeve question—that, too, is definitely fixed as far as the passing of the kimono effect is concerned, which is decidedly de mode. And, by the way, I am altering all my last year's kimono sleeves by cutting them off about three or four inches from what would be a legitimate shoulder seam and at this point attaching a puffed lower sleeve a trifle below the elbow or a long straight sleeve on morning frocks.

To bring about the now fashionable tunic effect on a last year's pink linen one piece frock was a simple affair. Fortunately I had some of the linen left, and with it I made a band about four inches deep to fit about the skirt. The lower edge of this strip I scalloped and bound with white wash soutache braid. The band was then placed on the skirt about five inches above the knees and a little longer in the back. The upper edge was simply turned in and stitched in place. The shirt waist front was scalloped; also the edges of the long tight sleeves. A black patent leather belt and a wide sailor collar of eyelet embroidery completed a mighty smart looking frock. The neck is slightly low. So I am going to wear a black velvet bow at the throat opening.

Turkish toweling, that has been so much exploited in fashion talks, is now being taken up as a dress material for entire gowns, and I am sure you will be interested in hearing about the toweling gown that I have just finished making.

It is of pale lilac mixed with white, an exact duplicate of the regular crash one sees in the bathroom. The skirt has three narrow plaits inserted in the middle of the front running up nearly to the waist line. The top of them is held down flat by an applied piece of violet embroidery on heavy white linen.

This embroidery is also used on sleeves at the elbow, where it is finished with a turnover cuff. The frock fastens up the front with white croch buttons, and there are a V shaped yoke and a stock of white wash net.

A Leap Year Party.

Since the new year began there have been lots of leap year parties
among hostesses of my acquaintance.
Perhaps the most amusing feature of a recent jolly affair was the proposal contest. In this the men were seated around the room at intervals, and the girls progressed about the circle, each girl making a mock proposal of marriage to each man. Each girl employed her own methods of persuasion
by kneeling to her adored one or by taking his hand or walking off with him to a corner or by sitting by his side or writing him a note. There was only three minutes' time for the girl to put the question before going on to the next victim. The man was allowed to accept or refuse. When the circle was completed each man wrote on a slip of paper the name of the girl whose proposal seemed to him
the best, either the most amusing, the most natural, the most original or the most convincing, and the girl who got the most votes received a prize. The girls also voted for the man who received the proposal in the best manner, the coyest or the most ingenious.

A variation of this idea would be to have each girl propose out loud to just one man, with all the others listening, and have the crowd vote on the best proposal made under these highly embarrassing circumstances.

When a buffet supper is served at a leap year party the girls must take the refreshments to their partners and keep them well supplied with everything. The ice cream should be in the form of hearts, and the favors may include hearts and arrows and the rest of the trifles usually associated with valentine affairs. To give a real leap year atmosphere Cupid may be replaced among the favors with girl
dolls armed with bows and arrows,
and there may be miniature suffragettes. For a very frivolous leap year party the prizes might be suffrage cartoons, Gibson pictures of women, dolls,
posters or other appropriate and inexpensive gifts.

Before saying goodbye to you, dear,
I must tell you about the charming new footwear. Many colors are being made up into suede shoes—purple, sage green, sea blue, raspberry red. The colored shoes are worn with dresses
to match and with white and black gowns, and colored stockings of these bright shades are worn with black shoes. Now black stockings have the walls of Troy in straight lines from the knee, which looks like black satin ribbon. Those who are economically inclined have lisle thread heels and toes to their silk stockings, for silk
does not last long, especially if you are a tramp, like your friend.

New York. MABEL.

Why Shoes Have Tongues.

Every one that wears lace shoes knows that there is a tongue of leather under the place where the two sides of the shoe meet, but there is none in button shoes. Probably very few persons know that this is a comparatively modern idea and is not for the purpose of keeping the laces from hurting the in-step, but is to keep out rain and snow.
There would be no discomfort if the laces touched the sock, but no matter
how closely a shoe may be laced up there is always a slight space which would allow rain to reach the stocking.

speaks doesn't have a much ruminat-
ing to do afterward.

We are often kept in the dark by the light remarks of our associates.

Every girl knows where there is splendid material for a world famous actress.

Some men keep their families in hot water all the time because the coal
bills are so high.

You can't make very great progress
with your own work when you give so much gratuitous oversight to your neighbors.

A High Flier.

Committees sit around and chew
The rag until the air is blue
And wander here and everywhere,
From market farm to market square,
And to the festive middleman
Tie—only in their minds—a can:
Give wholesale merchants wholesale fits
And tear the drummers' tune to bits,
But in the teeth of foes and friends
The price of living still ascends.

The chairman through his battered hat
Talks learnedly of this and that,
Examines causes that are not Important factors in the plot,
Gets gay with those who only make Such profits as they well can take,
Scores every trust, both great and small,
Out of the railroads takes a fall,
But still the cost of what we buy
Goes gayly climbing toward the sky.

The preacher from his pulpit cries
Against the wrong as prices rise,
The statesman at it takes a glim
And says it's much too deep for him,
The writer in the daily press
With all the others takes a guess,
The fellow in the corner store
On this live topic takes the floor,
But spite of all the rage and fuss
The price is still the sign of plus.

In congress, in the lecture class,
At stations where the milk trains pass,
Upon the whizzing trolley car,
In every village, near and far,
The topic is, without a friend,
Discussed and cursed from end to end,
And no one knows the reason why.
They only know that when they buy
Their groceries they have to pay
More than it cost them yesterday.

Oh, riddle, cannot sage or clown
The answer guess and call you down?

Could Count It All Up.

"Well, how do you live anyway?"
"I first lived on patrimony."
"Huh!"
"Then, as you know, on matrimony."
"Well?"

A GREAT COAL BIN.

Cardiff Is One of the Strangest Towns In the World.

Cardiff is a great coal cellar which is always being filled and always being emptied. It is filled by the men of the Welsh hills, who all day and all night—in times of peace—are filling up the trucks, which are brought down the valleys to the docks. It is emptied by men of the sea, who every day—in times of peace—bring ships from all the great ports of the world to carry away black cargoes.

Cardiff has no other importance and no other interest. It lives by coal, it grows rich by coal, and its streets are filled with men who are the masters and the slaves of coal. Even the shops, the restaurants, the theatres, the picture palaces, and the pawn-brokers exist only on the wages earned by coal, and the money which they take has been blackened by its dust.

Cardiff is the meeting place of the men of the hills and the men of the sea; yet, though they rub shoulders in the streets, and sit close together in the music halls, and stare into the windows of the same shops, there is no comradeship between them, and they do not know each other's woes. After an evening in the city the miners go back, shouting songs, to their small towns which straggle along the valleys to the coalfields, ready for the first cage down to the pits, and the seamen tramp back to the streets about the docks (running in at the public-house for one more drink), and wait for the next ship outward-bound with a cargo of coal.

Down Bute street and round Tiger Bay there are always seamen waiting for ships. They are paid off in Car-

War on Closed Shop

New York, May 21.—Continuing trade was urged in a meeting of the National Mers' Association. Politicians and officials were criticized for forcing the rule of placing label on city printing.

The report of the committee the union label in part was as follows: "As the presence of label on printed matter is a condition that this emanates from closed to non-union printers sends a discrimination against class of American work should be the concern of those who believe in an equal right to labor. The committee advises that the principle 'open shop' to return to printing marked with a comment and to give patronizing concerns ignoring

UNREST IN CUBA.

Negro Rising Is Feared on Occasion
of 10th Anniversary.

Havana, May 21.—There is no room
for doubt of the existence of a negro conspiracy, extending to all the provinces of the island, with the apparent intention of taking up arms against the Government to-day, which is the tenth anniversary of Cuban independence. The negroes appear to have been roused to rebellion by the denial of what seems to them their just political rewards for services rendered in the war of independence,
in which they constituted a great majority of the Cuban forces.

The feeling against the Government has been intensified by a law denying the negroes the right to organize a political party.

The principal trouble now is in the vicinity of Sagua La Grande, in Santa Clara Province, and Cruces,
where two armed parties are operating and in Oriente Province, where several bands are converging on Guantanamo City.

The situation is considered sufficiently grave for the Government to despatch last evening a column of 1,200 men from Camp Columbia, composed of cavalry and infantry, with field and machine guns, bound for Santa Clara and Oriente Provinces.

PRINCE LOSES LIFE.

Eldest Son of Duke of Cumberland
Dies In Auto Disaster.

Friesack, Prussia, May 21.—Prince George William, the eldest son of the Duke of Cumberland and his chamberlain, Von Greve, were instantly killed in an automobile accident on the highway near here last evening.
They left Berlin early in the afternoon, intending to proceed to Copenhagen by way of Hamburg to attend the funeral of the prince's uncle, the late King Frederick VIII.

The prince, who was at the steering wheel, probably failed to observe the signs of warning that the highway was being repaired, and drove the machine at full speed into a part of the roadway which was being macadamized. He lost control, the machine being ditched and turned on its end.
The prince's head was crushed. Chamberlain von Greve's neck was broken.
The chauffeur, who was inside the automobile, suffered from a broken arm.

Prince George William was born in 1880. His father, Duke Ernest August, Duke of Cumberland and Duke of Lunenburg, is head of the house of Guelph.

No Friction, Says Despatch.

Paris, May 21.—An inspired despatch from St. Petersburg to The Temps, denies in the most categorical form
the insinuation that there is a divergence of views between France and Russia. Russia, according to the despatch, is anxious to bring the Turco-Italian war to an end, as it is causing immense losses to Russian shipping. Nevertheless the Russian Government does not harbor the slightest design against Turkey, nor is it exercising pressure on Turkey.

Russia is likewise anxious to preserve the existing condition of things in the Balkans, for which purpose it has reached, understandings with Austria and Italy. These understandings are not inimical to France, which Russia hopes will not be influenced by the attempts of schemers to destroy the solid Franco-Russian alliance.

LIGHTNING'S RAVAGES

Big Brantford Factory Loses
Main Section.

Loss at the Farmers' Binder Twine
Co.'s Plant Is Estimated at $100,000
Two Firemen Are Severely Injured
and Watchman Is Nearly Suffocated—Two Victims Crashed Through the Roof.

Brantford, May 21.—Lightning caused a disastrous fire here last night
which, within half an hour, wiped out
the main factory of the Farmers' Binder Twine Co. and caused a loss of $100,000. Two firemen, H. F. Howarth and E. Wilde, of the central department, were severely, if not fatally, injured in the conflagration, while Watchman Richard Johnson was almost suffocated by smoke and oil fumes and severely lacerated by falling glass, a minute after the lightning struck, in his endeavors to turn in the alarm.

The building contained 96 spinning machines, around which was strewn,
from end to end, fibre already oiled
and ready for the process of manufacture. When lightning caused the first ignition, the blaze spread almost instantly throughout the entire building, the interior and contents of which were of a most inflammable nature.
When the firemen arrived the building was a seething furnace and efforts were directed towards preventing the conflagration from spreading to the storage building across the lane, where almost the entire winter's output was stored.

This saved the building, but it was at this spot that Firemen Howarth and Wilde went tumbling through the roof, a distance of 25 feet, into fire and smoke, apparently to their death. It brought forth great heroism on the part of Chief Lewis, who plunged into the building with others in an endeavor to rescue his men. Howarth, who weighs about 230 pounds,
fell on the needles of a finishing machine, his face and chest being badly slashed and one ear was almost severed. He was finally extricated from his terrible position, a mass of cuts
and wounds.

Wilde, it is thought, was injured internally. He fell to the floor.

During the progress of the fire the lightning, continued to flash vividly
and the firemen worked under a deluge of rain. Few people in the city knew of the blaze. Telephone connection was completely shut off.

The fire was of such volume that it left a charred mass of twisted iron and other debris inside of half an hour after it started. The loss is partially covered by insurance, but it is stated to be unlikely that the factory will be rebuilt, owing to the fact that operations in recent years have been conducted at a loss.

About 100 hands are thrown out of employment.

Halifax Tories Not Pleased.

Halifax, May 21.—The Conservatives of the constituency of Halifax
are not satisfied with the administration of federal patronage. The feeling assumed concrete form last night
when a gathering of over 400 accredited representatives of the party met and passed a resolution.

This resolution is addressed to Rt.
Hon. R. L. Borden and expresses strong dissatisfaction with the patronage committee of Halifax, which consists of five members. The resolution further asks that the patronage committee be dissolved and that the old system be returned to—that is,
that the patronage be left in the hands of the Government for the county and his defeated colleague.

The resolution passed unanimously and was signed by all present, and will be forwarded to the Premier.

Toronto, May 21.—John Graham, 207 Blecker street, was sentenced to 23 months in Central Prison yester- day morning by Magistrate Denison for a particularly cruel and vicious attack upon his wife, while under the influence of intoxication a week ago. It appears from the evidence adduced that Graham entered the house, and with a clawhammer, inflicted several ugly wounds upon the person of his better half. Had it not been for the interference of one of the boarders at the house, Ernest Brockband, Mrs. Graham would in all likelihood have lost her life for she was lying de- fenceless on the floor, her husband standing over her with the hammer raised for another blow, when Brock- band interfered. Graham pleaded for a lighter sentence, but the court re- fused acquiescence.

Catton, it is explained, teased the old man to the point of anger, and the latter rushed into the house for his rifle. The bullet lodged in Cat- ton's shoulder. Doctors yesterday were unable to extract the bullet. Splatt went to Burford Village and gave himself up, but he is not under arrest.

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience: "I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

LECTURE ON BLUE BIRD.

On Tuesday evening an interested audience in the Town Hall heard an entertaining lecture on the Blue Bird, Maurice Maeterlinck, given by Mrs. Macnaughton, of Montreal. To a graceful appearance and attractive manner, the speaker added the essential quality to a lecturer—a full, rich, well-modulated voice. In speaking of her subject Mrs. Macnaughton pointed out that in the play the pursuit of happiness is really the pursuit of spiritual truth. The author's nationality, (Belgian) was then spoken of and his qualities described, especially his mysticism and his feeling for the mystery in life. Two of his fantasy plays were described "Barbe Bleue" and "Sister Beatrice" their inner meaning being explained.

It was pointed out that a lecture on the Blue Bird was most appropriately given under the auspices of a church society for both the ancient Greek drama and that of modern times had their origin in religious rites.

Briefly hit, vividly the lecturer described the most striking scenes of the play, interpreting the philosophy and explaining the symbols.

In the opening scene the two children of the woodcutter, Lytyl and Mytyl, are summoned by a fairy to go in search of the Blue Bird which brings happiness and with the little boy and his sister go their companions, dog, cat, light, fire, bread, water, sugar and milk. They first visit the Land of Memory where they see their grandparents and little brothers and sisters, long passed away. Here we learn that the dead live in the loving memory of the dear ones who survive. But the Blue Bird is not there and they go to the lonely graveyard, which becomes a blooming "garden of the Lord," when the diamond or searchlight into the truth of things, worn by Lytyl in his green hat, (imagination), is turned to the desolate spot. Awe but enchanted by the marvellous change, Lytyl cries out "There are no dead." Mrs. Macnaughton interprets this to mean that the trials and sorrows through which we pass, bloom into beauty, transforming the sorrows of the past into flowers of experience and hope that enrich our lives. The little travellers next visit the great chamber where Night keeps the keys of nature's secrets. Behind the great doors are concealed war, disease, ghosts, terrors, etc., but Lytyl bravely opens the doors till at the last an entrancing garden is seen full of blue birds, sunshine and flowers, but still the Blue Bird of happiness escapes the children.

The last and most wonderful scene is the Kingdom of the Future where the unborn children, with their gifts of good or ill, await the call of their earthly parents. As the children leave, the song of happy mothers, rejoicing in the coming child, is heard in great waves of melody. But the Blue Bird is not here and so the child finds themselves again in the little cottage of the woodcutter after their long quest which has been but for one night, and, behold, there singing in his cage at the window, is the Blue Bird that they sought. Enraptured at the sight, yet Lytyl gives away his treasure to give health to the neighbor's sick child, and so has Lytyl grown in unselfishness.

The lecturer concluded her interpretation of this charming fairy play by expressing appreciation of the musical programme.

Miss Helen VanLoven played the "Sonata Pathétique of Beethoven" with much power and beauty. Three songs by Miss Caroline Herrington were also given.

programme.

Miss Helen VanLuven played the "Sonata Pathétique of Beethoven" with much power and beauty. Three songs by Miss Caroline Herrington were admirably rendered, and a Serenata on the violin by Mrs. Cameron Wilson was much enjoyed. Mrs. Franklyn VanLuven carried off the honors with her dramatic singing of "Elsie's Dream," from Wagner's Lohengrin, and Miss Grieve sang very daintily Gounod's "Le Parlate d'Amor."

The programme closed with a group of part songs, thus finishing a most enjoyable evening.

The accompanists, Mrs. Byrne Black and Miss VanLuven, were most sympathetic and the singing of the national anthem concluded the proceedings.
